SPIERS AND SURENNE'S
FRENCH AND ENGLISH
PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY.

NEWLY COMPOSED FROM THE FRENCH DICTIONNAIRE OF

THE FRENCH ACADEMY, LAVEAUX, BOISTE, BESCHRELLE, LANDAIS, ETC.,

AND FROM THE ENGLISH DICTIONARIES OF

JOHNSON, WEBSTER, WORCESTER, RICHARDSON, ETC.

CONTAINING A GREAT NUMBER OF WORDS NOT FOUND IN OTHER DICTIONARIES,

AND GIVING

1. All the words of both languages now in use, as well as those now obsolete, but employed by the earlier classic writers;—2. The principal terms connected with navigation and military tactics, the sciences, the arts, manufactures and trade, especially those contained in the Dictionary of the French Academy;—3. The compounds of words that most frequently occur, particularly such as are not literally translated;—4. The various equivalents of the words in their logical order, separated by numbers;—5. Short sentences and expressions illustrating such acceptations as present any difficulty to the student;—6. The modifications which the meanings of words undergo, on the addition of adjectives, prepositions, adverbs, etc.;—7. The principal idioms and familiar phrases;—8. The prepositions used after verbs, adjectives, etc.;—9. The irregularities of verbs, of adjectives, of the plurals of nouns, etc.;—10. Signs distinguishing between the literal and figurative use of words, showing whether they are antiquated or rarely employed, and the style to which they belong:

FOLLOWED BY

A COMPLETE VOCABULARY OF THE NAMES OF PLACES AND PERSONS, MYTHOLOGICAL AND CLASSICAL, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

BY A. SPIERS,

PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH AT THE NATIONAL COLLEGE OF BONAPARTE (PARIS) AND THE NATIONAL SCHOOL OF CIVIL ENGINEERS, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED,

WITH THE PRONUNCIATION OF EACH WORD ACCORDING TO THE SYSTEM OF SURENNE'S PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY; TOGETHER WITH THE IRREGULAR PARTS OF ALL THE IRREGULAR VERBS, IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER; THE PRINCIPAL FRENCH SYNONYMES; IMPORTANT ADDITIONAL DEFINITIONS, ILLUSTRATIONS, IDIOMS, PHRASES, AND GRAMMATICAL REMARKS; AND FOUR THOUSAND NEW WORDS OF GENERAL LITERATURE, AND MODERN SCIENCE AND ART:

PREFACE

BY THE AMERICAN EDITOR

THE want of a good French-English and English-French Dictionary has been so long and so sensibly felt, that no apology is necessary for presenting this volume to the American public. The time-honored works of Boyer and Chambaud, reproduced during the past century and a half in a multitude of different forms, but still the same in their inaccuracies, deficiencies, and total lack of proper arrangement, should certainly before this late period have been superseded by more reliable and useful original compilations. Lexicography should have kept pace with the changes and additions which have been made in both languages by successive advances in literature, science, and art. The difficulty of original compilation, however, as compared with mere imitation, long deterred the scholars of both countries from attempting any improvement in this department of science; and it was left for Professor Spiers to take the initiatory step in the proper direction. Passing beyond the restricted limits to which others had confined themselves, and not content with the antiquated authorities which they had exclusively and servilely followed, Spiers made an entirely new compilation, elaborated from the latest and best sources in both languages, and containing, to an extent before unapproached, the new terms which new necessities had created. The favor with which his work has been everywhere received by students, is sufficient proof of its merits as a practical book of reference; while the praises lavished upon it even by the most captious critics, are but just tributes to the judgment, research, and scholarship of its author.

The plan of the work having been explained at length, and its distinguishing features fully set forth in the Author's Preface to the Paris edition hereto subjoined, it remains for the American Editor merely to state what improvements he has made, and what new features he has introduced, for the purpose of rendering it in every way worthy of the respect and approval of his countrymen.

The first object of the Editor was the attainment of perfect accuracy; and to ensure this the whole work was subjected to a rigid revision. It was found that the original text abounded in errors of every kind. Nouns were called adjectives, and adjectives adverbs; accents were omitted by scores; the reference-numbers were often wrong, through entire paragraphs, and words necessary to the sense left out; crabbed and ungrammatical English was employed; in a word, there was every variety of mistake calculated to mislead the pupil in the grossest manner. More than three thousand errors, which still deface the Paris edition, have been corrected in this volume.

It is now admitted that no French and English Dictionary should be put into the hands of a beginner, which does not supply the pronunciation of every word. In our country particularly, where there are so many localities destitute of all facilities for the acquisition of French, a Dictionary ought in this respect to be a complete and reliable guide. It has, therefore, been deemed absolutely essential in the present work to accompany each word with its exact pronunciation; and for this purpose the notation of Surenne's celebrated Dictionary has been adopted, not only as being more simple and precise than any other, but as having already passed unscathed the ordeal of criticism. By the aid of his system, which is elsewhere fully explained, the sound of each word is indicated as given by the acknowledged standards of orthoepy in both languages.

Superior in fullness of definition as the French-English part of Spiers' work undoubtedly is, it was found that not a few acceptations occurring as well in the classical as in the living writers of France are omitted. The deficiency has here been supplied by the insertion of all those senses which could be gleaned from an extended course of reading. These new definitions, including additional versions of phrases which have been supplied as appropriate to different styles, are no less than three thousand in number. The various definitions and their proper construction are also further elucidated by occasional grammatical remarks, and by the addition of nearly one thousand illustrative clauses and sentences. Four thousand new phrases and idioms in common use, have likewise been incorporated, for the benefit of those who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of a tongue which may almost be regarded as the vernacular of the whole European continent.

The Editor believes that another feature which has been introduced into this volume greatly adds to its usefulness, especially in the case of those who have occasion to translate English into French. He refers to the remarks on synonymes, in which he has pointed out in the compass of a few lines their distinctive shades of meaning, and illustrated them by such examples as can leave no doubt as to their proper use. About twelve hundred synonymous terms are thus explained.

No student of the French language can have failed to experience the difficulty occasioned by the numerous irregularities of its verbs. To remove this, all the irregular parts, as well of the compound as of the simple verbs, have been inserted in alphabetical order, to the number of four thousand; so that a single reference gives the mood, tense, person, number, and the infinitive under which the meanings of the verb are to be found. This addition will be appreciated by all who remember their first lessons in French translation.

When it is added that four thousand new French words connected with science, art, and general literature, have been inserted, the Editor will have completed the account of his labors. These terms have been taken only from the best sources. They have been selected to a considerable extent from the departments of medicine, surgery, and chemistry, the value of the French text-books in these branches of science rendering it highly important that our students and professional men should encounter no difficulty in reading and understanding them.

No addition or alteration has been made that is not authorized by competent authority. To enumerate all the sources from which material has been drawn, would be as tedious as it is unnecessary. Among the more important French works to which the Editor is indebted, he would mention: Dictionnaire de l'Académie Française (sixième édition); Complément du Dict. de l'Académie Française; Bescherelle's Dict. National; Landais' Dict. des Dictionnaires; Boiste's Dict. Universel; Schuster's Nouveau Dict. Allemand-Français et Français-Allemand; Laveaux' Nouveau Dict.; Dict. du Commerce et des Marchandises; Dict. de Marine à Voiles et à Vapeur, Spiers' Manuel des Termes du Commerce Anglais et Français; Duvivier's Grammaire des Grammaires; Guizot's Nouveau Dict. Universel des Synonymes de la Langue Française; Laveaux' Dict. Raisonné des Difficultés Grammaticales et Littéraires de la Langue Française; etc., etc.

The strictest care having been exercised in the correction of the proofs, it is believed that as great a degree of typographical accuracy has been attained as is possible in a work of such magnitude and difficulty.

With these prefatory observations the Editor commits his work to the American world. He can only wish that the favor it shall receive, may be proportionate to the labor expended in its preparation.

G. P. QUACKENBOS.

PREFACE

TO THE PARIS EDITION.

THE plan of this dictionary was conceived and matured fourteen years since, in 1835, it was submitted to the Minister of Public Instruction of France (Monsieur Guizot) and the Minister of Public Works, who approved it highly and promised it encouragement. Under their auspices the work was commenced; and it has been prosecuted not withstanding innumerable difficulties. My deficiency, which I willingly avow, I have endeavored to compensate by constant research; and when this has been unavailing, I have had recourse to the knowledge of others, which has rarely been withheld.

But neither my own researches nor the learning of others have protected me from errors inseparable from such a work. Our great lexicographer Johnson having been asked by a lady how he could have defined pastern the knee of a horse, "Ignorance, Madam, pure ignorance," answered he. Assuredly to similar interrogations I may be allowed to offer by anticipation a similar reply.

This work contains, besides the words in ordinary use, the principal terms of the sciences, the arts, manufactures, commerce, navigation, etc. The nomenclature of each branch of the arts and sciences would alone form a volume. The limits of my work do not admit of the introduction of more than general terms; but from a desire of excluding none of these, words that could not upon this principle strictly claim admittance have been not unfrequently inserted. I have in this respect been guided by the dictionary of the French Academy. In addition to the terms of the arts and sciences contained in the latter, innumerable terms especially of science, of civil engineering, of the arts and manufactures, of commerce, the customs, finances, political economy, railways, steam-engines, have been introduced, many of which are of too recent adoption to have found their way into dictionaries in general.

Before entering, however, into detail, I would present a few observations on the French and English dictionaries already published.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.

It has been justly remarked by an eminent French grammarian, Mr. Delalande-Hadley, that the least bad, the least defective of these dictionaries scarcely rises to mediocrity. There are usually wanting in them the most ordinary words and senses in general use connected with literature, science, and technology. In truth, the hapless student is most fortunate when he does not find them, as then he is not led into error for if by any mis chance he should unluckily meet with the word he is looking for, he will for the most part find idle definitions or a numberless host of words in lieu of the one thing sought, the equivalent, the proper term; and if by singular good fortune this is given, it must be known beforehand (and then the research is useless) to extricate it from all that surrounds it; the lexicographer having heaped up into one confused mass, indigestaque moles, words, senses, definitions, examples, idioms, and proverbs, as if the sole purpose were to challenge the ingenuity of the most skilful:

Devine si tu peux, et choisis si tu l'oses.

There is almost a total absence of the language of literature, and of those innumerable idiomatic forms of speech peculiar to each language, which next to the words themselves are the most important and useful part of a dictionary. Misinterpretations and barbarisms abound in them; misinterpretations, because when words resemble each other in the two languages, the resemblance is held to be sufficient without a comparison of the definitions to ascertain whether the sense is the same; barbarisms, because words are fabricated when they are unknown. Judging by these words, it would be imagined that the French part was written by an Englishman, and the English by a Frenchman, or rather that both were the performance of one equally unskilled in both languages. A few examples will justify the preceding assertions.

OMISSIONS.

Examples of ordinary or literary words wanting.

Aérage, airing; aluminium, alum-works; barème, ready reckoner; beurrerie, butter-dairy; bicorne, two-horned; breveté, patentee; briqueleur, brick-layer; corsetier, stay-maker; douzil, spigot; embêter, to annoy; to worry; embrun, spray; étanche, water-tight; wind-tight; air-tight; Iliade, Iliad; internat, boarding-school; inverse (noun), reverse; Marseillaise, Marseillaise hymn; mioche, brat (a little child); se rappeler, to remember (omitted in nearly all); rétribuer, to remunerate (wanting in most); tournevis, screw-driver, etc. (V. Ex. page xiii.)

The omissions in the compounds are most curious; it may even be said that omission is the rule, and insertion the exception. In a dictionary of one language this is justifiable, but not in that of two languages, as a compound in one tongue is often translated by a single word in the other, and when it is not, it cannot always be construed literally. For instance, bell-hanging is rendered in French by pose de sonnettes, and carpet-bag by sac de nuit, neither easily guessed; but bill-case is in French portefeuille; burial-ground, cimetière; hair-dresser, coiffeur; night-mare, cauchemar; salt-cellar, salière, etc. Such as are not translated literally have been inserted.

Examples of the omission of ordinary senses of words that are given.

At antécédent is not to be found previous conduct; at cuir, fault in language; égoïste, selfish; favori, whisker; entrepôt, bonded warehouse; portefeuille, bill-case; priser, to take snuff; résine, resin.

DEFINITIONS INSTEAD OF THE PROPER TERM.

Examples of idle definitions or of a host of words instead of the equivalent, the proper term. (1)

Aluner, to steep in alum-water, instead of to alum; pétase, winged hat of Mercury, for petasus, cuir bouilli, leather prepared in a certain manner or boiled in some resinous substance to make bottles, buckets, etc. (for waxed leather); coup de soleil, a violent impression of the sun upon those that are exposed to it in hot countries (for sun-stroke). At pantalon, pantaloön and buffoon are given; trousers alone, the only proper term, is omitted.—In the English-French part it is still worse. Arson, action de mettre le feu à une maison (this is called incendie par malveillance); mittimus, un ordre en vertu duquel on met un criminel en prison (for mandat de dépôt); search-warrant, ordre du juge pour faire une visite (mandat de perquisition); waistcoat, chemisette, camisole, veste (which describe perfectly what it is not, as qilet would what it is).

MODIFICATION OF THE SENSES OF WORDS, FORMS, AND IDIOMS.

Examples of words with adjectives, etc., and idiomatic forms wanting.

Bonne pour tout faire, maid of all work; fer forgé, wrought iron; fer laminé, rolled iron; papier vélin, wove paper; papier vergé, laid paper; piano droit or vertical, upright piano; piano à queue, grand piano; terre sainte, consecrated ground; bon voyage! a pleasant journey to you!

Envers et contre tous, in opposition to all men; sauf erreur ou omission, errors excepted; à genoux on one's knees; un genou en terre, kneeling on one knee; induire en erreur, to lead into error; chanter misère, to plead poverty; passer la plaisanterie, to be no jest; porter préjudice, to be prejudicial, injurious, or detrimental to; laver la vaisselle, to wash up the dishes. For others, see the words coup, déconsidération, escalier, huile, mémoire, monnaie, rêve, rhume, soir, sourire, souvenir, etc., etc.

BARBARISMS AND MISTRANSLATIONS.

Examples of barbarisms, solecisms, and mistranslations.

FRENCH BARBARISMS: Jour du quartier (quarter-day), for terme; à l'ouverture du livre (à livre ouvert); ouissance exécutive (pouvoir exécutif); seigneur lige for seigneur suzerain (liege being applied in French to the vassal only and not to the lord).

ENGLISH BARBARISMS: He cousin, she cousin, she defendant (after which other examples might be dispensed with); flying coach for stage coach; to turn a thing with a droll (what it means I have never yet been able to discover); a turning joint (vertèbre); it does not concern me NEITHER one way NOR other; to lay (lie) along upon the ground; wind in the small guts (iliac passion). I would apologize for venturing to present the last example; but I cannot otherwise convey to the reader an adequate idea of the elegance of language constantly remarked in these dictionaries.

Examples of words fabricated.

Partition, in music, for score; pass-rose for holly-hock; English taffety for court plaster; fagone or fagona for pancreas; redhibitory for setting aside a contract of sale. To translate the English word walrus, the dictionaries have invented walrus, walros, and torwac for morse.

Examples of mistranslations.

Actuellement is translated by actually, really, instead of at present, because of the resemblance; billion, billion (instead of a thousand millions; billion in England means a million of millions); détrempe, water-colors (for distemper [in painting]); dissidence, scission (for difference, schism; scission signifies cutting); emphase, emphasis (instead of magniloquence, pompousness); inofficieux, inofficious, unkind (for he disinherits the legitimate heir); trillion, trillion (for billion); vindicté, vengeance (for prosecution of crime); vindicté publique, avenging the public (for prosecution of crime by the public prosecutor).

Pomme de pin has been so invariably translated by pine-apple, and vice-versa, that all the French journals, in their account of the city feast of the 9th of November, until within the last two or three years, annually charged our aldermen of London, proverbially renowned for their good taste, with having eaten (peace to their digestions!) so many hundred sir-cones!—in French, pommes de pin.

I cannot refrain from presenting one of the innumerable erroneous indications, as it proves how entirely these works have been left as they were by the self-styled authors of new dictionaries, the principal novelty of which consists of the new name they bear and some new blunders added to the already plentiful stock. At the word Louvre, the reader will find in nearly all dictionaries the king of France's palace at Paris. This was true in the reign of Charles IX. and of Henry IV. down to that of Louis XIV. But no king of France has inhabited it since Louis XV. It would be as well to define it the king of France's hunting-seat, as it was in the good old time of Dagobert, or his stronghold, because it was so under Philip Augustus. For a hundred and fifty years then has this definition been erroneous; but it has remained as it was written perhaps by the first lexicographer, whose definition was probably right when he penned it.

These extracts assuredly prove the truth of the preceding assertions; they might have been increased ten or a hundredfold.

HISTORY OF THE DICTIONARIES OF THE TWO LANGUAGES.

The history of the dictionaries of the two languages explains their insufficiency.

The earliest French and English dictionary of which I find any record was an anonymous publication of 1570. In 1611 Cotgrave's appeared, and of this Johnson speaks in terms of high encomium, calling it "a truly valuable work" and "a rich store-house of old French and English also." Boyer's name replaced Cotgrave's; Boyer's alone has survived.

The French and English dictionaries are but reprints of Boyer and Chambaud with mere changes in the size, sometimes with insignificant corrections and additions, and frequently with fresh faults. Boniface put into octavo what was before a quarto, added his name, the announcement of 5000 familiar terms, and many new faults. (1) Wilson selected among the materials of Boyer; but as he does not appear to have known French (a slight disadvantage it must be confessed), he was naturally and necessarily directed by chance. The smaller dictionaries are made from the larger ones, or rather in what they give they are the larger ones in a diminutive form.

Boyer and Chambaud.—Boyer was a French Protestant, who sought a refuge in England at the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He died in 1729. He published his dictionary in 1699 or 1702. The first edition of the dictionary of the French Academy appeared in 1694; the second, not until 1718; so that Boyer must have compiled his from the first. Johnson's great work, which will ever be the basis, the foundation of English lexicography, was not published till 1755, i. e., twenty-six years after Boyer's death. There existed before Johnson's, according to Lord Chesterfield, no English dictionary, nothing but word-books, in which "all words, good and bad," says he, "are there jumbled indiscriminately together, insomuch that the injudicious reader may speak and write as inelegantly, improperly, and vulgarly as he pleases, by and with the authority of one or other of our word-books."

How faithfully does this description portray the state of the French and English dictionaries, which bear internal evidence of their having been composed from the word-books Lord Chesterfield describes. Boyer then composed his dictionary, if he did not transcribe Cotgrave's with Sherwood's supplement, as his successors have done with regard to his, from the English vocabularies, before there existed an English dictionary in the absence, then, of proper guides, he fabricated the words with which he was unacacquainted. It is easy to estimate the value of words coined by a foreigner by no means impressed with the genius of our language. Chambaud, who at least knew French (and I doubt whether Boyer was well acquainted with his own language), succeeded Boyer. He was justly desirous of availing himself of the labors of Johnson; but he seems to have contented himself with translating Johnson's definitions; a system which has a most grave inconvenience, that of introducing every thing that approaches the word, all its synonymes, in short, every thing that is not the word, and of excluding nought but the word itself. It is, however, this dictionary of Boyer, published in all forms, and copied, even to the misprints, (1) transcribed under all names, which has been the guide of all who have studied French and English for a century and a half, for five generations!

(1) At pendulum, Boniface corrected un pendule into une pendule (which means a clock); and at licence, called patente and given by Boyer, Chambaud, and Wilson as droit d'auban, the old name for it, Boniface has corrected it into drot d'aubaine.

THIS DICTIONARY.

This work has been composed from dictionaries exclusively English or French. Among the former, the dictionaries of Johnson, Webster, and Richardson have been taken for its basis. I have often culled from Smart's Walker remodelled; and I regret not having been acquainted, until nearly the end of my task, with Worcester's critical and pronouncing dictionary, the nomenclature of which is rich. I have never consulted Ash, who, after his etymology of curmudgeon, can inspire no confidence. Of the French, the dictionary of the Academy is naturally the ground-work; its authority has always been with me decisive. I am, however, much indebted to the two dictionaries of Laveaux and Boiste, but perhaps still more to the valuable pages of Bescherelle.

I have abstained from naming in my title any other than general dictionaries, having scrupulously avoided adding names, too frequently all that is borrowed from the books. A long list of names in a title-page is often extracted from a catalogue.

SOURCES OF NEW WORDS.

Nearly all the new words, not literary, introduced into this dictionary, have been borrowed from the following works: and I here acknowledge the obligation with pleasure and gratitude: Brande's Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, Hebert's Engineer's and Mechanic's Encyclopædia, Loudon's Encyclopædias of Agriculture, Gardening, Plants, and Cottage, Farm, and Villa Architecture and Furniture, McCulloch's Dictionary of Commerce and Commercial Navigation, and Ure's Dictionaries of Chemistry and Mineralogy, and of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines. For innumerable terms of the arts and manufactures I am indebted principally to Dr. Ure's esteemed works, and for very many to the personal kindness of the learned author. For these terms in French I have had recourse to translations of several of these works, and to the French Dictionnaire du Commerce et des Marchandises, but principally to the personal assistance of the most competent French authorities in every department; and no fewer than five members of the Institute have, with a disinterestedness characteristic of the scientific men of France, enriched these columns with perhaps some of their most valuable information.

The part of the Dictionary relating to the Natural Sciences has been wholly entrusted to Dr. Doyère, Professor of Natural History of the French University, and author of works on these subjects. Dr. Doyère has placed the scientific name first, and afterwards the vulgar terms, marked with the sign of familiar words, thus (¶).

(1) Cénacle has remained upper-room, guest-chamber, instead of supper room; cytise has ever been left dans le trifol le bean trifol; échasse is upper scaffolding pole, because it was originally a misprint for upper, scaffolding-pole.

Whole works have been read for railway terms and those of steam-engines, for many of which I am indebted to Dr. Lardner's kindness. The terms of commerce have been extracted from my Manual of Commercial Terms in English and French; those of the post-office from the conventions between Great Britain and France, and the "articles agreed upon between the post-offices" of the two countries. Various technological vocabularies that have been collected by private gentlemen, and especially those made in England by Engineers of the French government, have been communicated to me. Law terms naturally attracted my serious attention; either they did not exist in the French and English dictionaries, or they presented the still greater inconvenience of being given erroneously (V. arson, mittimus, and search-warrant, page ix). Mr. Marie, a French barrister and since Minister of Justice, and Mr. Else and the late Mr. Leahy, members of the English bar, have kindly afforded me the most valuable assistance.

Examples of terms of commerce, science, or the arts and manufactures, not in other dictionaries.

Artesian (HEBERT); cholérine (COPLAND); copartnery (McCULLOCH); dahlia (LOUDON); to madder (URE); to ret (URE); unindifferency (BLACKSTONE); air-stove (HEBERT); bleach-works (URE). I would refer the reader to the English-French dictionary for the following words. For commerce: bank (with 3 new compounds); dock (of 5 compounds 4 are new); cash (4 out of 6, and among the new is cash-office, caisse); bill (6 out of 8). For civil engineering: bridge, drain, lock, pile and its compounds, rail, and particularly road and its compounds. For the arts and manufactures: gas (with 8 new compounds); engine (9 new compounds), cotton (10), iron (15), and coal (44 compounds, 21 of which are in no other dictionary).

In ordinary language or that of literature the new words added are numerous and important. Familiar terms have been gleaned from authors, from tradesmen's catalogues, from all sources. I have done what Johnson alleges he could not do, but probably did not attempt; I have "visited the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools, and operations, of which no mention is found in books."

I have borrowed considerably from the terms of our own great writers and from those of the French, including authors of our own times, preserving those antiquated or obsolete words or senses that are to be found in the standard authors of either country. The English should assuredly be able to read with the assistance of a French dictionary Pascal, Corneille, Racine, Molière, La Fontaine, Boileau, Montesquieu, Bossuet, Fléchier, Massillon, Voltaire, Rousseau, Mirabeau, Chateaubriand, De Lamartine, Béranger, etc. I have inserted words sanctioned by such writers, "quand même," as Balzac has well expressed it, "l'usage n'en aurait pas encore corrigé l'amertume de la nouveauté." Much circumspection, it is allowed, should be used in granting such words the privilege of naturalization; but the French Academy did not exclude from the first edition of their dictionary Balzac's neologisms féliciter, urbanité, etc.; they have since admitted La Fontaine's Fabuliste and the bienfaisance of Abbé de Saint-Pierre; and what should we now say to a lexicographer of antiquity, had there been any, who should have obstinately refused to admit into his rolls Cicero's neologism moral philosophy, or Plato's Providence?

I have scrupulously abstained from creating new words; it is the business of the lexicographer to record the creations of others. I have added no terms but those I have found and have deemed legitimate.

Examples of literary terms or those in general use that are not in other dictionaries.

Anarchiser (MIRABEAU), to throw into anarchy; archinoble (LESAGE), most noble; barème, ready reckoner; boutonnet (VOLTAIRE), little bud; briqueleur, brick-layer; buvard, blotting-case; calcaire (noun) (ACADÉMIE), lime-stone; causant (SÉVIGNÉ), chatty; chloroforme, chloroform; corsetier, corset-maker; un dépendant (LA BRUYÈRE), a dependant; dérailer, to run off the rails; détrôner (VOLTAIRE), to dethrone; diaboleau (RABELAIS, LA FONTAINE, VOLTAIRE), devilkin; enténébrer (CHATEAUBRIAND), to involve in darkness; ergoterie (ROUSSEAU), cavilling; escompteur, discounteur; Iliade, Iliad; inestim (DEUILLE), unesteemed; inharmonieux (LAHARPE), unharmonious, unmusical; inindustrie (MIRABEAU), unskillfulness; internat, boarding-school; internissable (VOLTAIRE), unsullied; magnanerie (DARCEY), silk-worm nursery; mésinterpréter (ROUSSEAU), to misconstrue; mioche (BESCHERELLE), brat; poisseux (BUFFON), pitchy; se rappeler (ACADÉMIE), to remember (wanting in nearly all); statuette, statuette; trass (BESCHERELLE), tatts or terras (a cement much used); viaduc (BESCHERELLE), viaduct; etc., etc. For other words, see OMISSIONS, page VIII.

Obsolete words and senses of the French classics not in other French and English dictionaries.

OBSELETE WORDS: Accointement (CORNEILLE), skilfully; assembleur (LA FONTAINE), collector, gatherer; bonhommeau (LA FONTAINE), simple, easy man; breveté (LA FONTAINE), brevity, shortness; cachement (MOLIÈRE), hiding; consonner (MOLIÈRE), to harmonize; fieux (LA FONTAINE), child; grippeminaud (LA FONTAINE), grimalkin; hommeau (LA FONTAINE), little man; jarni (MOLIÈRE), by heaven; penaille and penaillerie (LA FONTAINE), monks; polide (RACINE), pretty; tête-bleu (MOLIÈRE), zounds; voi (RACINE), indeed, bless me, etc.

OBSELETE SENSES: Assembleur (LA FONTAINE), collector, gatherer; compasser (MOLIÈRE), to consider, to weigh; malpropre (CORNEILLE, MOLIÈRE), unfit; ressentiment (CORNEILLE), injury; ressentiment (FLÉCHIER, VOLTAIRE), feeling; sentiment (CORNEILLE), resentment; trotter (LA FONTAINE), to follow fast, etc.

Unauthorized and useless words, that are in new dictionaries merely because they have been in old ones, have been pitilessly suppressed; and room has thus been found for new and useful words without exceeding the size of ordinary dictionaries.

COMPOUNDS.

In both dictionaries the compounds are inserted when they are not translated literally, or when they are rendered by single words. This is an important part of a dictionary of two languages; but these words are not generally given in a dictionary of one language only. Brass-foil is in no English lexicon; but one must be gifted with powers of divination to surmise that it is called in French oripeau or clinquant. The dictionaries insert brass-candlestick, brass-cannon, brass-kettle, brass-money, that are translated literally. These then I have suppressed, or rather I have replaced them by other compounds not construed literally, the number of which has been so greatly increased that I have sometimes (as at the word coal) as many as forty-four compounds, twenty-one of which are in no other dictionary. In the French-English dictionary these compounds are scarcely fewer. Among those of the word porte, I have numbered seventy-six, sixty-one of which are in very few French and English dictionaries, and of these twenty-nine are to be found in none.

SUPPRESSIONS.

Not, however, satisfied with making valuable additions to the vocabulary, I have endeavored to render the service of suppressing improprieties, not merely of language that have been accumulating for more than a century. I have never forgotten that I was writing for youth, and that the instructor of youth is invested with a moral priest's

COINS, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

The coins, measures, and weights of one country have been accurately reduced to those of the other. It will be readily imagined that for both nations the new system has been adopted; a table of them has been added at the end of the dictionary. I have taken for the basis of these reductions the Annuaire du bureau des longitudes, which is an authority in England and France. (See page 666 and the words of the table.)

POLITICAL INSTITUTIONS AND PUBLIC FUNCTIONS.

I have succinctly explained the greater part of the political institutions and of public functions when they differ in the two countries. (V. état civil, états généraux, tiers état, etc.) I have given at the names of the months of the calendar of the first French republic, constantly met with in French works, the corresponding time of the ordinary calendar. (V. Vendémiaire, Brumaire, Frimaire, Nivôse, Pluviôse, Ventôse, etc.)

ABBREVIATIONS.

The greater part of my readers will not learn with indifference that the principal abbreviations and contractions in use are found in the following pages; they are intended for the foreigner, who is often embarrassed by their absence.

GRAMMATICAL PART.

It is superfluous to dwell on the importance of the grammatical accuracy of a work intended to serve as a guide, and destined by its very nature to be an authority. The dictionaries of the two languages are in this respect sadly deficient; they commonly unite in one article the active and neuter verb, and not unfrequently words of two or three different denominations. Since, the preposition, adverb, and conjunction, forms a single article. The dictionaries constantly construe the verb active by the neuter, and vice versa. Surpass, the active verb, is rendered by exceller, l'emporter, which in French are neuter verbs, and which necessarily mislead the student; it should be exceller sur, l'emporter sur. These faults are of constant recurrence. Much care has been bestowed on this portion of the work. I have called attention especially in the French-English dictionary to the principal grammatical distinctions, and have added observations and frequently examples to elucidate them. (See the words dont, échapper, gens, le (the pronoun), ni, on, se, voir, etc.) I have cautioned the student against confounding such words as in one of the languages are rendered by two different words in the other. This will perform the service of a dictionary of synonymes. (V. apporter and amener, to bring; aveu, confession, and confesse, confession; briser, casser, and rompre, to break; jour and journée, day; opprimer and opprresser, to oppress; partial and partiel, partial; retourner and revenir, to return; soir and soirée, evening; soupçonneux and suspect, suspicious; etc.)

ACCEPTATIONS OF WORDS.

Like Johnson, whose example cannot be too often imitated, I have presented the acceptations of words in their genealogical order, i. e., in the logical order in which they were probably formed or at least deduced from each other

By this system, the student understands them better and the memory retains them more tenaciously, for the various senses present to the mind but a series of modifications of one and the same idea, because they follow each other and are connected together like so many links of a chain. The different senses are separated from each other by numbers, in order that they may not be taken for synonymes of the same acceptations. Obsolete senses, however, are generally placed last, but before those of the arts or sciences. Acceptations peculiar to certain objects or to certain arts and sciences are given in the alphabetical order of their designations. (V. aiguille, canon, face, œil, pièce, tête.) Words that are nearly synonymous or that differ by their style only, are united under the same number.

I deem it unnecessary in a dictionary of two languages to give definitions that may be sought elsewhere, and that occupy space better devoted to what can be found there alone. My definitions are, in general, but means of distinction; ennobler, to ennoble, is defined by to confer nobility on, in order to distinguish it from to ennoble (give excellence to), which is rendered in French by ennobler; at jour I have put day (space of time from sun-rise to sun-set), that it may not be confounded with day (space of time from rising to retiring to rest), in French, journée.

In this part of my task I have every where observed and denoted those most important distinctions between the acceptations of words taken in a proper or a figurative sense, applied exclusively to persons or to things, employed in a good or a bad sense. These may be reckoned among the principal difficulties of the study of foreign languages; for a word the same in signification not unfrequently receives a totally different application in passing from one language to another.

Use in a good or a bad sense.—Words often assume a bad sense in one language which they have not in another. Femelle is applied in a good sense in French to animals only; in relation to persons it is used in a bad sense; to translate into French a female friend or a female deity by une amie femelle, une divinité femelle, would be making an egregious and ridiculous mistake; these two expressions would be equivalent in English to a she friend, a she deity. Pathos, unlike the Greek or English word pathos, being used in a bad sense, means in English bathos, bombast, fustian, rant. The above is more than sufficient to prove the absolute necessity of such indications in dictionaries.

Distinction between persons and things.—The difference in this respect is very great between any two languages; in one, words apply to both which in another are employed of one only of the two. Incurable (incurable) is used of persons and things, whereas inguérisable, its synonyme, is employed of persons only. Méritant is said of persons only, and may be translated by deserving or meritorious; méritoire on the contrary is used but of things, and can be rendered by meritorious only, as deserving is not employed in English of things. Natal is similarly distinguished from natif, both signifying native. Fréquenter must be translated by to frequent (a place); but to frequent he society of (persons). Sometimes this affects the place of the adjective, as in ma'honnête. (V. SUICIDE.) In short, it is a distinction that must constantly be made and that must consequently be learned; where is it to be recorded, if not in a dictionary?

Distinction between the proper and figurative senses.—This I consider one of the most important parts of the study of a language, and consequently of the dictionary of two tongues. For blindness the French use cécité in the proper sense, for a want of sight, and aveuglement in the figurative for ignorance, although aveugle (blind) is employed in both cases. On the other hand, mûr in the proper sense is with us ripe, and in the figurative, mature; lisible is properly legible, but figuratively readable. It has been well said that every language has its peculiar metaphors, so established by usage that if the nearest equivalent term is substituted, ridicule ensues. Had Young found the distinction between entrailles (proper and figurative) and boyaux (proper only) denoted in dictionaries, he would not have written to Fénélon: "Monseigneur, vous avez pour moi des boyaux de père," "My lord, you have the entrails of a father for me."

EXAMPLES.

Examples have been inserted when they have been deemed necessary to elucidate the value of a word or a sense, to illustrate the manner of using it, to render more obvious the distinction between a word and its synonymes, or to exemplify some grammatical difficulty; frequently to show some particular use of prepositions that differ in the two languages. They have not been repeated at derivatives; the reader must refer to the primitive. I have studiously avoided adducing examples of obsolete significations, that might lead the student into error. The limits of this work have not permitted me to consider literary beauty in the examples, which have been reduced to what mathematicians call their lowest terms. After having thus altered or maimed them, I have been unwilling to add to them the names of authors.

MODIFICATION OF THE SENSE OF WORDS.

The sense of words, and especially the manner of translating them, is often considerably modified by the addition of other words, especially adjectives or nouns subjoined to nouns, adverbs to verbs, etc.; or these have forms peculiar to themselves. Groseille signifies a currant; but grosse groseille, or groseille à maquereau, is gooseberry; or if groseille is considered to mean gooseberry, then groseille à grappes becomes currant and groseilles à la crème our gooseberry fool. I have given the principal sorts of things when not translated literally, as piston plein is not Englished by full but solid piston; papier de Chine is not China but India paper; encrier à pompe, not pump but hydraulic inkstand. A literal translation would often be unintelligible and not unfrequently ludicrous; as piano à queue (grand piano) would inevitably be, if the evil genius of a luckless student, unable to find it in his dictionary, and thus left to chance, were to light on piano with a tri! Much attention has been devoted to this department of lexicography; the reader is referred to the words bois, coton, effet, fer, lampe, lettre, machine, monnaie, papier, savon, vinaigre, etc. The verbs have also adverbs peculiar to them, which, to be known, must be gleaned from reading, and ought to be recorded in dictionaries. The French say lutter ferme or fort (to struggle firm or strong) which we render by to struggle hard; but douter fort we do not translate by to doubt hard, but to doubt much, although we do say for pleuvoir fort, to rain hard or fast; transpirer abondamment is with us to perspire copiously or profusely. In fact, they cannot be guessed, but must be learned, and ought, therefore, to be found in the columns of a dictionary.

IDIOMS AND FAMILIAR PHRASEOLOGY.

Idioms and familiar phraseology are, after words, the most important part of a dictionary of two languages; they are indispensable, fundamental, the very essence of a language. It is a strange fact that in dictionaries exclusively English they are rarely noticed; and in the greater part of dictionaries wholly French they occupy a prominent part. From isolated words the foreigner cannot form idioms; he must receive them as a people have made them; he must take the home-born plant, and not substitute an exotic production.

I have inserted all those in general use and those I have collected, either in my reading or in my personal intercourse with the French, during a twenty years' residence in Paris: they are placed where they will probably be sought, at the important word, which is not a slight innovation; they are separated from the acceptations and examples; they are classed, so that one may be readily found without a perusal of the whole; the nouns are presented in the following order: 1, the word with the adjective; 2, with other nouns; 3, with prepositions; 4, with verbs. The verbs are not less methodically arranged: 1, attended by adjectives or adverbs; 2, accompanied by nouns; 3, in any part of their conjugation; 4, when attended by prepositions or adverbs, that so profoundly modify the sense in English. Each of these series is exhibited in alphabetical order. (V. heure, pied, pierre, temps, tête, voie, etc.; faire, vouloir, etc.)

PREPOSITIONS, MOODS, ETC., GOVERNED BY WORDS.

Prepositions.—I have shown what prepositions are governed by words when they differ in the two languages. Grammars can present but few such words; the place of these indications is the dictionary. Mine is, I believe, the first that has supplied them. They are perhaps the greatest difficulty to be encountered in the study of a language, and few or none are so thoroughly conversant with them as to be able to dispense with assistance. How then is a learner to imagine to guess that the French say angry against (fâché contre) and not with; and pleased of (content de) and not with; to consist in and never to consist of; to answer of, to dispense of, to threaten of, to inspire a sentiment to any one, to reproach a. th. to a. o., etc.?

Moods, etc.—When a word governs the subjunctive mood in French, I have always noticed it by marking (subj.) or [subj.]; no indication is given when the mood governed is the indicative. (V. abominable, admirer, v. n., bien que, bon, douter, quoique, etc.) If the verb requires ne or admits of the suppression of pas or point, it is stated in a note at the end of the word, and frequently elucidated by an example. (V. craindre, cesser, oser, pouvoir, savoir.)

VOCABULARIES OF MYTHOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES, AND NAMES OF PERSONS.

These two vocabularies contain all the important names that differ in the two languages; they also comprise the names connected with Biblical, Greek, and Roman antiquity; they have been compiled with great care. The genders, when they are considered doubtful, are omitted.

GENERAL ORDER AND TYPOGRAPHICAL ARRANGEMENT.

One of the most important ends to be attained was to introduce order and method into the "tenfold confusion" found, where all was "dark, wasteful, wild." Senses, definitions, examples, idioms, and proverbs, were, to use the language of Lord Chesterfield, "jumbled indiscriminately together," so that a student adventuring into these wild regions was more likely to lose himself than find the object of his search. The definitions of words that have but one acceptation, or all the senses of which correspond in both languages, have been suppressed. When a definition or an explanation, which is generally a single word, is inserted, it is in a parenthesis and in a type different from the translation. All the acceptations follow each other without interruption, in order to present at a glance the whole of the significations of the word: these acceptations are separated from the examples; the latter open a new paragraph and bear numbers corresponding to those of the senses; they are given in a smaller type, as are likewise the grammatical observations at the end. The examples are, in their turn, separated from the idioms, and these begin another paragraph with the type of the acceptations.

After having presented to the reader all the details that the limits of a preface admit (and I fear rather to have abused his indulgence), I have but to request him to compare this dictionary with other works of the same description. I wish it to undergo serious and critical examination. I venture to suggest a few words for comparison. For ordinary terms: apoplexie, atteinte, comprendre, coup, déconsidération, doux, escalier, fâché, fini, fleuve, frapper, jour, monnaie, moralité, pantalon, pension, pensionnat, père, représailles, rester, rêve, rhume, soir, soirée, vache, vif, vigne, etc.; for the arts and manufactures: coton, cuivre, fer, gaz, houille, huile, soie, etc.; for commercial terms: assurance, banque, capital, commis, compte, compagnie, dock, effet, envoi, escompte, paiement, police, présentation, prix; for the customs: entrepôt, droit, transit; for engineering: coussinet, écluse, pavé, pont, route, vapeur, etc.; for the grammatical part: s'attendre, bien, ce, cesser, craindre, dessous, dessus, dont, échapper, feu (adjective), gens s'indigner, je, le (pronoun), ni, on, pardonner, se, sien, tu, voir; for law: arbitre, comparaître, contrat, détention, emprisonnement, héritier, homicide, magistrature, perquisition, vol; for military terms: faction, file, garnison; for mining: filon, galerie, etc. for the navy: ancre, armée, bâtiment, câble, flotte, mât, voile, etc.; for post-office terms dépêche, lettre, port, etc.; for railways: convoi, rail, train, etc.; for general technology machine, pompe, puits, roue, treuil, vis, etc.

The pleasing duty now devolves on me of acknowledging my obligations, which are great and numerous. The difficulties of the translation from English into French have been submitted to Frenchmen, and vice versa. The gentlemen whose names I have the honor to inscribe here, have been kindly pleased to enrich these volumes with some of their most valuable information. I would here offer them the expression of my gratitude.

These gentlemen are Professor Élie de Beaumont, Member of the Institute of France (for geology and mineralogy); Robt. Bell, Esq., author of the Lives of the Poets, the History of Russia, the Life of Canning, etc. (for English literature); Professor Blanqui, Member of the Institute of France (for political economy and commerce); Professor Combes, Member of the French Institute (for mining and mechanics); Monsieur Cortambert, author of several works and professor of geography (for geography) Cesar Daly, Esq., architect and director of the Revue des Travaux Publics (for architecture); Professor Donaldson, of University College (for architecture and building); Rich. Else, Esq., barrister of London (for law); Professor Frémy, of the École Polytechnique (for chemistry); Admiral Giffard (for naval terms); Professor Guigniaut, Member of the Institute of France and Secretary General of the Council of the University of France (for geography); Edw. Holmes, Esq., of London (for music); Dr. Lardner, director of the Cabinet Cyclopædia, author of the Steam-engine, etc. (for the exact sciences and civil engineering); the late Mr. Leahy, barrister of London (for law); Monsieur Marie, formerly Minister of Justice and Keeper of the Seals (for law); D. McCarthy, M. D physician to the English Embassy in Paris (for the medical sciences); the late Admiral Massieu de Clerval, commissioner of the Board of Admiralty (for the navy); General Saint-Arnaud (for military terms); Monsieur Sichel, M. D. (for ophthalmology); Captain Stephenson, of the Scotch Fusilier Guards (for military terms); Dr. Ure, F. R. S. (for chemistry, the arts and manufactures); Monsieur De Vilback (for music); Monsieur Villemain, Perpetual Secretary to the French Academy and formerly Minister of Public Instruction (for the French language and literature). I regret infinitely the utter impossibility of naming here the many other persons to whose kindness I am indebted for much very valuable information.

The gentlemen who have so kindly contributed to the dictionary, and the public in general, are earnestly entreated to communicate their observations; it is by these principally that I hope to correct the errors that have inevitably found their way into these pages; they will be gratefully received, and will meet with all due consideration.

I confidently trust that I have conscientiously and faithfully fulfilled the promises of the title of my work; it is for others to appreciate the execution of my task; but like Johnson I confess that "I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavored well."

- before final letters signifies that these letters are changed in the feminine into those that follow: TROMPEUR-E, SE, I a trompeur, in the masculine, and trompeuse, in the feminine.

N. B. When the signs, abbreviations, etc., precede the first number, they apply to all the senses of the word; when they follow a number, they are applicable to the acceptation of that number only. These signs placed after the English apply to the latter.

Prepositions in parentheses.—The French preposition used before a noun or pronoun is in small capitals, and the corresponding English one in italics; the French preposition used before a verb is in italics, and the English one Roman. Thus at the word FACHÉ, (DE, for; de, to; que [subj.]) signifies that before a noun or pronoun de is used in French, and for in English; être fâché de quelque chose, to be sorry for any thing; before a verb de is used in French and to in English, or sometimes que with the following verb in the subjunctive mood: être fâché de voir quelque chose, to be sorry to see any thing; je suis fâché que ce soit ainsi, I am sorry it is so.

Irregular verbs in parentheses.—In the parentheses which follow irregular verbs, the first word is the present participle, the second the past participle; in the other parts, the moods and tenses are marked. The parts that are not irregular are not given. As the imperfect of the indicative is formed from the present participle, the conditional from the future, and the imperfect of the subjunctive from the preterit of the indicative, they are omitted immediately after the verb, but will be found in their proper alphabetical place. This observation applies equally to the imperative. When at a verb the manner of conjugating it is not pointed out, the verb is regular; if ending in er, it is conjugated like parler; if in ir, like finir; if in oir, like recevoir; if in re, like rendre.

(1) — shows that the English word is the same as that which translates the French word marked thus (—) the first time it occurs in the paragraph. If the first time, the sign — is employed, the French word may be translated by either of the English equivalents given before.

EXPLANATION OF THE KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION,

STANDING AT THE HEAD OF EACH PAGE IN THE FIRST PART

It being impossible to represent with exactness all the French sounds by any letter or combination of letters in the English language, and any such attempt having a tendency rather to mislead than assist the pupil, it has been deemed expedient in this work to make reference to French key-words alone, as will be seen in the line running at the head of each page in Part I. If the pronunciation of these twenty-two key-words be acquired correctly from a teacher, this Dictionary will enable even a beginner to pronounce without difficulty every word in the language. For the benefit of those, however, who have not the means of thus becoming acquainted with them by imitation, an explanation of the Key is subjoined, in which those sounds that are not common to the two languages are approximately represented by combinations calculated to impart the most correct idea of them to an English ear.

KEY.

A	a	in the French key-word mal is pronounced like a in fat .
	â	" mâle " a in far .
E	é	" fée " a in fata .
	ê	" fée " e in there .
	è	" fée " e in there (prolonged).
	ê	" je " u in tub .
I	î	" ti " i in pin .
	ï	" ti " e in ma .
O	o	" moi " o in not .
	ô	" môle " o in no .
	ô	" mort " o in nor .
U	u	" suc has no English equivalent. ¹
	û	" sûre " "
OU	ou	" four is pronounced like oo in moor .
	où	" forte " oo in moor (prolonged).
EU	eu	" jou " u in tub . ²
	êû	" jeûne " u in tub (prolonged). ³
	œ	" peur " u in burn . ³
AN	ân	" pan " en in encore . ²
IN	în	" pin " an in sang . ²
ON	ôn	" bon " on in song . ²
UN	ûn	" brun " un in sung . ²
LL	ll* liquid	" li in brilliant .
GN	gn* "	" gn in mignonette .

 A word to which no pronunciation is assigned, is sounded like the one which immediately precedes.

¹ When the English letter è is pronounced, the tongue becomes widened in the direction of the cheeks, so that it touches the first molars. While it is in this position, advance both lips a little, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow oval passage for the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the molars, and its tip against the fore-teeth of the inferior jaw. Then let the breath pass, and you have the French u. The circumflex placed over this letter merely prolongs its sound.

Syn.—ADRESSE, SOUPLESSE, FINESSE, RUSE, ARTIFICE. Adresse is the art of conducting enterprises in a manner calculated to insure success. Souplesse is an ability to accommodate one's self to emergencies. A finesse is a kind of stratagem, in which shrewdness and cunning are combined with dissimulation. A ruse is a disguised way of arriving at one's ends. An artifice is a deep-laid secret plan for the execution of one's designs. Adresse employs means, and requires intelligence. Souplesse avoids sudden obstacles, and requires quickness of thought. The finesse by insensible degrees gains its point, and presupposes cunning and penetration. The ruse deceives; and is the result of an ingenious imagination. The artifice surprises, and implies a well-practised dissimulation. The merchant acts with adresse; the courtier, with souplesse; the diplomatist practices finesse; the spy succeeds in a ruse; the prosecuting attorney uses artifice in his examinations.

Bien —, 1. loved; beloved; well-beloved; dear; dearly loved; 2. (subst.) love; true love.

SYN. — AIMER, CHÉRIR. Aimer means to love; chérir signifies not only to love, but to manifest that love by tenderness and attentions. We aimons in general all that pleases us; but we chérissions only persons, or what forms a part of ourselves, as our ideas or our prejudices. An infant is often chéri by those who cannot aimer its father or mother.

SYN. — AIMER, MIEUX, AIMER PLUS. Both of these expressions indicate preference, but the first does not imply that there is any attachment to either of the two objects compared, while the second does imply such attachment. An upright person aimerait mieux (would rather) be disordered by the foulest calumnies, than dishonor himself by the slightest wrong to another, because his aimer plus (loves) justice (more) than his standing in the eyes of the world.

S'AIMER, pr. v. 1. to love o's self; 2. to love each other, one another; 3. to like o's self; 4. to like each other, one another; 5. to delight in; 6. to take pleasure in; 7. to like (in).

AISE, E [a-sé] adj. 1. (à, to); impetuous; 2. easily; convenient; commodious; 3. (pers.) at o's ease; in easy circumstances; 3. well off.

1. C'est — à dire, it is easy to say; il est — de dire cela, it is easy to say that. 2. Avoir les manières —a, to have easy manners.

Syn. — AISE, FACILE. Both these words mean without difficulty; but facile properly excludes the difficulty which proceeds from obstacles and opposition; aise, that which springs from the nature of the thing itself. Thus we say the entrance is facile, when there is nothing to obstruct it; that it is aise, when it is large and convenient to pass through.

Syn.—AMITIÉ, AMOUR, TENDRESSE, AFFECTION, affection. The first two exceed the rest in intensity. Amour (love) springs up in a moment, without examination and without reflection, and is characterized by ardor and vehemence. Amitié (friendship) originates in esteem and congeniality of disposition, requires time for its growth, and is distinguished by its constancy. Tendresse (tenderness) is less an action than a condition of the heart; it sometimes approaches weakness, and is often awakened in women than in men. Affection (affection) is less strong and active than amitié, and more tranquil than amour; it is the offspring of relationship and frequent intercourse. Inclination (inclination) is merely a disposition to love, which, cultivated, may become amour or amitié, as circumstance direct.

accordent à la sensibilité à la pleasure which things afford us, and may be expressed by a simple gesture, a clapping of the hands; louanges proceed from the discernment of the mind, and can be expressed only by words. We are always flattered by applaudissements, in whatever way they are motivated; it is not so with louanges; they please us only when they are delicate and sincere.

Syn.—BONHEUR, FÉLICITÉ, BÉATITUDE. Bonheur (happiness) properly signifies that state of fortune which is capable of furnishing the material of pleasure, and of giving us opportunities of enjoying them. Félicité (felicity) expresses the state of that heart which is disposed to enjoy pleasure, and to find it in what one possesses. Béatitude (beatitude) implies an imagination fully satisfied. The possession of property, honors, or friends constitutes bonheur (happiness); the judicious enjoyment of all these things, félicité (felicity); while béatitude (beatitude) is perfected only beyond the grave. Bonheur (happiness) belongs to the rich; félicité (felicity) to the wise; béatitude (beatitude) to the pious.

Syn.—BONHEUR, PROSPÉRITÉ. Bonheur (good fortune) is the result of chance; it arrives unexpectedly. Prospérité (prosperity) is the result of a judicious management of affairs; it comes by degrees. Fools sometimes have bonheur (good fortune); the wise are not always sure of prospérité (prosperity).

Sm.—BORD, côte, rive, rivage. The bord touches the water; the côte (coast) is elevated above it; the rive (bank) and rivage (shore) are its limits, the rivage being properly nothing more than an extended rive. The term bord (margin, bank, shore), is applicable to all bodies of water, and is rendered differently in English for each; riens (banks) belong to streams and rivers; rievages (shores) are properly employed in connection with seas and large rivers only; the côte (coast) belongs to the sea alone.

[But is pronounced butt at the end of a phrase, or before a vowel or a silent h.]

BUT, but, vix, dessein. The but is more fixed; it is where one wishes to go. The but is more vague; they exist in what one wishes to procure. The dessein is more steady; it is what one wishes to execute. One se propose (proposes to himself) a but (an end); one a (has) vues (views); one forme (forms) a dessein (design).
 The true Christian has no other but than Heaven;

 —, cabalism. Faire une —, faire — a, k
cabal; monter une —, to get up a ca- bal.

Syn.—CABALE, COMLOT, CONSPIRATION, CON-JURATION. A cabale is the intrigue of a party of faction, formed in order, by secret practices, to turn the natural course of events to its own advantage; the prevailing idea of the word is that of assembling a number, and maneuvering under handily with address. A complot is the clandestine union of two or more persons for the purpose of overthrowing or destroying, by some blow as efficacious as unexpected, that which stands in their way, or is an object of envy or odium. A conspira- tion is the association of a greater number of persons, to bring about some serious change, oftener in public affairs than in private, often for the worse than the better. A conjuración is more important and dangerous than a conspiration; it contemplates a revolution, a fundamental change in public affairs.

Syn. —CALAMITÉ, MALHEUR, INFORTUNE. A calamité is a positive evil, only in relation to the uses; it may menace individuals, without actually overtaking them. The malheur is the evil reversed; the infortune is the evil felt. The calamité is the thing itself; the malheur is the blow with which it afflicts us; the infortune is the effect which it produces upon us. The plague is a calamité (calamity) which depopulates a city, but which some may escape; he who beholds his son fall a victim to it, experiences a malheur (affliction); the situation in which he is placed by this one, is his infortune (malfortune).

Syn.—CHAGRIN, TRISTESSE, MÉLANCOLIE. Chagrin (chagrin, fretfulness) springs from discontentment; under its power the mind loses its peace, unless it has the strength and wisdom to overcome it. Tristesse (sadness) is generally caused by great afflictions; by fit the heart is weighed down, when, through excessive sensibility, it gives itself up to its influence. Mélancolie (melancholy) is the offspring of the temperamental; it gives birth to gloomy thoughts, and banishes all such as are lively and pleasurable, unless its morbid tendencies are neutralized by judicious diversions and amusements.

Syn.—CHOISIR, PRÉFÉRER. Choisir means to decide in favor of a thing in consequence of the merit which it possesses; préférer signifies to decide in favor of a thing from any motive whatever whether on account of its merit, of affection, complaisance, or policy. The mind makes the choix (choice), the heart gives the préférence (preference), it is on this account that one frequently CHOISIR (choi-sir) what one knows, and prefère (give the preference to) what one loves.

Syn.—CHOISIR, FAIRE CHOIX. Choisir is applied to things which one wishes to use; faire choix, the persons whom one wishes to raise to some estate or dignity. Choisir implies a comparison, and selection of things on account of their merits; faire or faire choix means simply to make a choice, without any reference to comparison or relative merit.

Syn. — COLÈRE, COURROUX, EMPORTEMENT. At impatience agitation against one who offends us, o.
acts contrary to our wishes, s the common characteristic of these words. Colère (anger) is an inward feeling of displeasure, more lasting than the other two, though it may sometimes be disguised.
Courroux (wrath) belongs to a more elevated style it is the anger of a superior against an inferior and threatens vengeance or punishment. Em-portement (rage, fury, passion) is properly the outward demonstration, which makes a great noise but passes quickly away. Colère (anger) implies sensibility; that of women is the most dangerous.
Courroux (wrath) implies haughty; that of princes is the most to be feared. Emportement (passion) implies impatience; that of our friends is the most disagreeable and the hardest to bear.
COLÈRE, adj. 1. ¶ (pers.) choleric; passionate; hasty; 2. angry; in a passion.
Syn. — COLÈRE, COLÉRIQUE. Colère (angry) indicates the act; colérique (passionate) expresses the inclination, the disposition. A man is colérique (passionate) that is, often, habitually colère (angry, in a passion). Our may colérique (passionate) without being colère (angry), and colère (angry) without being colérique (passionate).

 — inébranlable, qui ne s'est jamais démentie, unshaken constancy. Avec —, 1. with =; 2. steadfastly; steadily.
 Ébranler la —, to shake =.
 Syn. — CONSTANCE, FIDÉLITÉ. Constance (constancy) implies no previous engagement; fidélité (fidelity) does imply such engagement. A person is constant (constant) in his tastes, fidèle (fidelity) to his word.
Fidélité seems to relate rather to the actions; constance, to the feelings. A lover is constant (constant) without being fidèle (fidelity), if, while still loving his mistress, he seeks the favor of other women; he is fidèle (fidelity) without being constant (constant), if, while he pays no attention to other women, he ceases to love his mistress.
Fidélité (fidelity) implies dependence; we speak of a fidèle (fidelity) subject, a fidèle (fidelity) domestic, a fidèle (fidelity) dog. Constance (constancy) implies firmness and courage; we say constant (constant) in labor, in misfortune. The fidélité (fidelity) of the martyrs to their religion was the source of their constance (constancy) amid the tortures inflicted by their persecutors.
CONSTANT, E [kôn-tân, t] adj. 1. constant (firm, persevering); 2. stable; steadfast; steady; 3. constant; unrelenting; uninterrupted; 4. certain; undoubted; indubitable; unquestionable; 5. (of winds) steady; 6. (alg., geom.) constant.
 4. Un fait —, une vérité —e, a certain, undoubted, unquestionable fact, truth.
 Quantité —e, (alg., geom.) constant quantity. Pour —, for certain; as a certainty; as certain, undoubted, unquestionable.
 Syn. — CONSTANT, FERME, INÉBRANLABLE, INFLEXIBLE. The common idea conveyed by these words, is that quality of the mind which puts it out of the power of circumstances to alter its resolutions or purposes. The last three differ from the first by implying the additional idea of courage; with these different shades of meaning, that ferme (firm) signifies a courage that does not abate; inébranlable (unshaken), a courage that resists obstacles; inféxible (inflexible), a courage that cannot be turned from its purpose. A good man is constant (constant) in friendship, ferme (firm) in misfortunes; and, when justice is at stake, inébranlable (unshaken) by menaces, and inféxible (inflexible) to prayers.

Syn.—CONTRITION, REPENTANCE, REMORSE. Contrition is the profound and spontaneous sorrow which a sensitive heart feels at having committed sin, viewed as an offence against God. Repentance is the bitter and deliberate regret of a fear-stricken soul that would repair a fault or reprehensible action which it may have committed. Remorse is the overwhelming and vengeful upbraidings with which conscience punishes those who are guilty of a crime, or have grossly transgressed the laws written on the human heart. Contrition (contrition) has reference to sin; it is in the heart, and is inspired by the sublimest emotions of religion. Repentance (repentance) relates to every kind of evil, or to every action regarded as evil; it is in the soul, and is suggested by experience and reflection. Remorse (remorse) has reference to crime; it is in the conscience, and is produced, independently of oneself, by the very crime itself. Remorse (remorse) leads the guilty to repentance (repentance); repentance (repentance) leads the Christian to contrition (contrition).

CRAINDRAS, cond. 1st, 2d sing.

CRAINRE [krai-dr] v. a. (CRAIGNANT, CRAINIT; ind. pres. CRAIGNE; NOUS CRAIGNONS; pret. CRAIGNIS; subj. pres. CRAIGNE 1. (que subj.) (de) to fear (to); to be afraid (of, to); to be in fear of; to dread; to be fearful of (a th.); to apprehend (a th.); to be apprehensive of (a th.); 2. to fear (respect); 3. to dislike; not to like; 4. (th.) to be injured, hurt by; to be unable to support, to bear; to be unable to bear.

1. Je crains qu'il ne vienne, I fear he will come; craignez-vous qu'il ne vienne! do you fear he will come? je crains qu'il ne vienne pas, I fear he will not come; je ne crains pas qu'il vienne, I do not fear he will come; ne craignez-vous pas qu'il ne vienne! do you not fear he will come? Je crains de le voir, I fear to see him. 2. — Dieu, to fear God. 3. Un animal qui craint l'eau, an animal that dislikes the water. 4. Une plante qui craint le froid, a plant that cannot bear the cold.

— bien, (V. senses) to fear much; to be very much afraid; ne pas —, (V. senses) 1. to be fearless of; 2. to make bold (to); 3. not to hesitate (to). Faire —, (V. senses) to endanger; faire — q. u. à q. u., (V. senses) to make a o. fearful, apprehensive of a th. Ne crains rien! ne craignes rien! 1. do not be afraid! 2. never fear! 3. (pour q. u.) never fear (a o.). ... n'est pas à —, not to be feared; there is no fear of...

[CRAINRE, conjugated affirmatively or interrogatively, requires the verb following it to be accompanied by ne; conjugated negatively, the verb following it does not take ne; but with the negation and interrogation united the ne is necessary. It requires the subj. in all cases except when it is followed by de and the t. f. Ex. 1.]

CRAINTE, e, pa. p. V. senses of CRAINRE.

Non —, (V. senses) unfeared; un-dreaded.

Syn. — CRAINRE, APPREHENSER, REDOUTER, AVOIR PEUR. Want of courage makes one craindre (fear); uncertainty of success causes him to appréhender (apprehend); distrust of one's resources leads him to redouter (doubt); the promptings of imagination induce him to avoir peur (be afraid). The generality of mankind craignent (fear) death more than such else. The more ardently we desire a thing, the more nous appréhendons (apprehensive we are) that we shall not obtain it. Whatever merit an author may imagine himself to possess, he ought always to redouter (doubt) his favorable reception by the public. Women are constitutionally timid; many of them are liable to avoir peur (be afraid) upon the most trifling occasions.

(A, to) to expose o's self; 15. § (A, to) to expose o's self (to danger).

Syn.—DÉCOUVRIRE, TROUVER. Trouver is said of that which several persons seek; découvrir, of what is sought by one alone. Many have tried to trouver (find) the philosopher's stone; Newton découvrit (discovered) the attraction of gravitation. Découvrir is applied to objects of importance trouver to those that are less important. Thus it may be said of a navigator that he has découvert (discovered) a country, and trouver (found) inhabitants in it.

One découvre (discovers) what is secret or concealed; he trouve (finds) what is visible or apparent, though it may have been beyond his reach or out of his sight. The earth has mines as it contains in its bowels; we découvrons (discover) them; it has plants and animals on its surface; we trouvons (find) them.

Syn.—DÉCOUVRIRE, DÉCÉLER, DÉVOILER, RÉVÉLER, DÉCLARER, MANIFESTER, DIVULGER, PUBLIER. One découvre (discovers) something new, and through a desire of informing some one about it, découvre (discovers) it to him. One finds a man who has concealed himself, and with the view of doing him an injury, décèle (betrays) him. One découvre (discovers) a mystery, and an inclination to appear or to describe well, leads him to dévoiler (unveil) it. One knows a secret, and a wish to make use of it impels him to révéler (reveal) it. One has knowledge of some particular fact, and, desiring to turn it to advantage, déclare (declares) it. One has been acquainted with an subject, and with the view of making it as well known to others, manifeste (unfolds) it, (sets) it (forth). One has been entrusted with some confidential matter by a friend, and through an inclination to injure him, or a love of talking, divulgue (divulges) it. One has possession of private knowledge of some particular thing, and a wish that none may be ignorant of it, prompts him to pUBLIER (publish) it, (make) it (known).

5. — des tentations du monde, to resist the temptations of the world; 7. Il s'en défend, he denies it.

Syn. — DÉFENDRE, SOUTENIR, PROTÉGER. These three words denote the act of shielding any person or object from an injury experienced or anticipated. One defend (defenda) what is attacked, soutient (sustains, supports) what is in danger of attack, protège (protects) what needs encouragement. A wise and powerful king ought to protect (encourage) commerce in his dominions, soutenir (sustain) it against foreigners, and défendre (defend) it from enemies.

One is protégé (protected) by others; he may se défendre (defend himself), and se soutenir (sustain himself). One is protégé (protected) by his superiors; he may be défendu (defended) and soutenu (supported, sustained) by his equals.

Syn. — DÉFENSE, PROHIBER. Both these words signify interdicted, forbidden; but prohiber (prohibit) has the more limited meaning, being seldom used except in connection with things that are défendus (forbidden) by human law. Swearing is défendu (forbidden); smuggling is prohibé (prohibited).

DIFFÉREMENT [di-fé-rân-mân] adv. (DE, from) differently.

DIFFÉRENCE [di-fé-rân-a] n. f. 1. | § difference (state of being different); 2. § disagreement; unlikeliness; 3. § discrepancy; 4. § test; 5. (log., math.) difference.

1. La — de vous à moi, the difference between you and me; la — entre nous, the difference between us.

Légère —, slight difference; — marquée, material =, — notable, wide =; — peu sensible, immaterial =, — de longitude, (geog.) meridian, meridional distance; — en longitude, (nav.) departure. D'une vaste —, widely different; sans —, without a =; undisguished. Faire une —, 1. to make a =; 2. to make a test; faire, mettre de la —, to make a =.

Syn.—DIFFÉRENCE, DIVERSITÉ, VARIÉTÉ, HÉTÉROGÉNÉITÉ. Difference (difference) implies a comparison which the mind makes between objects, with the view of forming distinct ideas respecting them. Diversity (diversity) has reference to a change in things which pleases the taste with a succession of novelties. Variety (variety) presupposes an assemblage of dissimilar objects which fill the imagination with agreeable images, and relieve the mind from the weariness occasioned by uniformity. A bipartite (bipartite) is an assemblage, formed by contraries or bad taste, of objects as ill suited as to produce a ludicrous effect.

Syn.—DIFFÉRENCE, INÉGALITÉ, DISPARITÉ. The term difference (difference) is applicable to whatever distinguishes objects. Inequality (inequality) seems to indicate a difference (difference) in quantity; disparity (disparity), a difference (difference) in quality.

DIFFÉRENCIER [di-fé-rân-si-é] v. a. 1. to distinguish; to make a difference between; 2. (math.) to differentiate.

DIFFÉREND [di-fé-rân] n. m. 1. Difference (contention); 2. difference in value.

Ajuster apaiser, assourir un —, to adjust a difference; to make up a =; voir —, être en —, to differ; to have a =; faire naître un —, to cause a =; partager le —, 1. to split the =; 2. § to meet half way; vider un —, to settle =.

Syn.—DIFFÉREND, DISPUTE, QUERELLE. A collision of interests causes différends (differences); a contrariety of opinions produces disputes (disputes); all nature gives rise to querelles (quarrels). We vidons (settle) différends (differences); we terminons (terminate) disputes (disputes); we apaisons (make up) querelles (quarrels).

DIFFÉRENT [di-fé-rân, t] adj. 1. (DE) different (from); dissimilar (to); unlike (...); 2. (DE, from) different (distinct); 3. —s, (pl.) different; divers; several.

— l'un de l'autre, unlike.

DIFFÉRENTIEL [di-fé-rân-si-é] adj. (math.) differential.

DIFFÉRER, v. n. (de, ...) to defer; to delay; 2. § to put off.

— de partir, to defer, to delay leaving; to put off leaving.

Sans —, without delay.

DIFFÉRER, v. n. 1. (DE) to differ (from); to be different (from); to be dissimilar (to); to be unlike (...); 2. DE, in (from) to differ; to be of a different opinion.

2. — d'avoir de q. u., to differ in opinion from a. o.

DIFFICILE [di-fi-si-é] adj. 1. (d, to; de, to) difficult; 2. § hard; 2. unaccommodating; 3. particular; difficult, hard to please; 4. (pers.) particular; lainty; nice; 5. (of horses) wilful.

1. Il est — à contenter, he is difficult to please; 2. Est — de le contenter, it is difficult to please him.

Point —, difficult point; 2. § rub; trop —, (V. senses) squeamish. — à vivre, unaccommodating. N'être pas —, (V. senses) not to stand upon trifles; faire le —, to be nice, squeamish. En faisant le —, squeamishly.

[DIFFICILE with fire requires a before an infinitive, unless fire is used impersonally, in which case it takes de. (V. Ex. 1.)]

DIFFICILEMENT [di-fi-si-l-mân] adv. difficultly; with difficulty.

DIFFICULTÉ [di-fi-kul-té] n. f. 1. difficulty; 2. impediment; hindrance; 3. difficulty; objection; 4. § difference (contention).

Syn.—DIFFICULTÉ, OBSTACLE, EMPÊCHEMENT. The difficulty (difficulty) embarrasses; it lies in the nature and circumstances of the thing itself in which we are engaged, and keeps us from deciding. The obstacle (obstacle) arrests our progress; it has its origin in what is external or foreign, and, meeting us in the way, interferes between us and our object. The empêchement (impediment) resists; it implies superior force, and opposes us in the execution of our wishes. Some minds find difficulties (difficulties) in the simplest subjects. The eloquence of Demosthenes was the greatest obstacle (obstacle) which Philip of Macedon encountered in his political career. The near relationship of parties is in most countries an empêchement (impediment) to their marriage.

Établir une —, to distinguish; faire — (de), to make a distinction; parvenir à la —, to arrive at eminence. — Qui ne fait pas de —, undistinguishing; qui marque — tranche, contradistinctive.

Syn.—DISTINCTION, SÉPARATION. Distinction (distinction) is opposed to identity; it cannot be used with reference to one and the same body. Divergence (divergence) is the opposite of resemblance; it cannot exist between objects that have no points of difference. Separation implies a want of unity; there can be no separation (separation) of things as long as they constitute one whole. There is distinction (distinction) between the soul and the body, inasmuch as they are two different substances; there is also divergence (divergence), because the nature of the one bears no resemblance to that of the other; but during the life of man there is no separation (separation), for their union constitutes the individual.

DISTINGUÉ E [dis-tin-ghe] adj. 1. distinguished; eminent; accomplished; 2. (th.) genteel; 3. (of men) genteel; gentlemanly; gentleman-like; 4. (of women) lady-like; genteel.

C'est là ce qui distingue, voilà ce qui distingue, that is the distinctive mark, peculiar characteristic of.

SE DISTINGUER, pr. v. 1. to be distinguished; 2. (PAR) to distinguish o's self (V. F.); to be eminent (for).

Syn.—DISTINGUER, SÉPARER. We distinguish (distinguish) what we do not wish to confound; we separate (separate) what we desire to remove. The ideas we have for not respecting different objects, the qualities we attribute to them, the peculiar features that characterize them, enable us to distinguish (distinguish) them; arrangement, time, place, and other circumstances serve to separate (separate) them. Difference of language distinguishes (distinguishes) nations more than dissimilarity of numbers. Absence apart (separates) friends without severing their attachment.

DISTINGUER, v. n. to distinguish; to make a distinction.

Syn.—Docilité, douceur. Docilité (docility) belongs to the will; it is opposed to obstinacy, and consists in doing what others desire. Douceur (amiability) pertains to the character; it is the opposite of ill-nature, and implies pleasure in conforming to the wishes of others. The first is a virtue; it may be acquired. The second is a feature of the character; it is a gift of nature.

Docilité (docility) is shown only by the inferior to the superior; douceur (amiability) displays itself to all alike. The one shrinks from defending its opinions against those to whom it thinks it a duty to yield; the other sustains its views without offending any one.
